

BULLET IN BRAIN BUT GIRL LIVES

Rifle Ball Wounds Little Arlene McGourty of Newtonville.

A rifle bullet entered the brain of three-year-old Arlene McGourty of No. 649 Washington street, Newtonville, yesterday, yet the child is still alive and may recover. Arthur Boyd, fifteen years old, is held responsible for the shooting, which is being handled by the Newtonville police. Fleary Boyd of No. 17 Crafts street, father of the boy, has provided specialists and nurses for the wounded child.

Chief of Police Mitchell investigated the shooting and said last night that it was arrested even if the little girl should die.

GLASGOW'S SON HURT.

Nobleman Seriously Injured at Aviation Meeting.

BOURNEMOUTH, Eng., July 18.—Alain Bayle, son of the Earl of Glasgow, was seriously injured to-day, when the inaugural ceremony of making a flight at the aviation meet took place in the ground. Bayle was picked up unconscious. To-day's was the fourth accident that has marred the present series of flights.

For some time this afternoon much anxiety was felt for Robert Lorraine, the actor, who made a round trip flight at 1000 feet. His plane was seen to crash, but he was heard alive still, but later reports of his safety were received.

Piloter Moorme was seen to fly over the ground at 1000 feet, and in a few minutes fifty-seven seconds, crashed. He was picked up unconscious. He returned twenty-four miles in forty-two minutes forty-seven seconds.

20 WOUNDED PASSENGERS SCHEMED TO RIDE MONORAIL CAR

Track Gives Way on Sharp Curve as Vehicle Is Going 45 Miles an Hour.

47 PASSENGERS ABOARD Panic Follows Crash and Most All Are Cut or Bruised in Accident.

NEW YORK, July 16.—The first wheeled trip of the new monorail car, which was being taken on the Hudson River, ended in a disaster this afternoon. Twenty or more persons were injured, some seriously, when the structure at the top and bottom of which forms a track for the car gave way on a sharp curve near Clermont, N. J., midway between New York and New Haven.

The car was whirling along at the rate of forty-five miles an hour and was apparently working smoothly as it approached Clermont. Then, without warning, it fell, tore the road of rails and splintering over head.

The car stopped, toppling for an instant and then fell over on its side. The forty-seven passengers were flung about in all directions, and many of them were injured. Some of them were killed, and many others were seriously hurt. The car was a small, open-sided vehicle, and the passengers were not wearing any safety harnesses.

Passengers Terribly Cut.

Shoppers of broken glass from the car were scattered about the scene. Many of the passengers were injured, and some of them were killed. The car was a small, open-sided vehicle, and the passengers were not wearing any safety harnesses.

OHIO'S U. S. LEADERS IN A PANIC, SEEK SAFE ASID

Save the State From Harmful Is the Cry and They Will Confer Tomorrow.

SITUATION IS CRITICAL Dick, Ellis and Burton Will Lay Platform Before President for His Approval.

BEVERLY, July 16.—All the reports that are reaching the President from Ohio are that if the election were held there at any time within the next month, James Harrison would sweep the State.

Consequently, the reason of Ohio is the problem of supreme leadership that now confronts the Republican party. Harrison must be killed off as a Presidential possibility, according to the Republican leaders, as a side to the problem. It may be noted that if Harrison is to win in Ohio, the Republican leaders hope that a Democratic ticket will be elected in New York, on the principle that the more Democratic the better the chance for a new Ohio Democratic two years hence.

The National Committee is now in session at Cleveland, and the Ohio delegation is being organized. The Ohio delegation is being organized, and the Ohio delegation is being organized.

THE GREAT SEAPORT

Improvements Here Would Help Put Boston in Front Rank as Port for World's Commerce.

Lease of South Boston Pier by New Haven and Move to Get Grand Trunk Here Only the Beginning of Commercial Campaign.

BOSTON, forward march!

The old city which has been a center of moving things has been the stage most impressively and great efforts for the development of her harbor and the increase of her commerce are well advanced.

When Governor Draper stated at the close of the Boston Chamber of Commerce that he had made a verbal agreement with the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, it was a significant step.

The New Haven road has leased the pier and the pier on the Atlantic, a pier which the Grand Trunk had been using, without having the slightest right to occupy it, into the foreign freight business again.

Bids for Foreign Trade.
For three years the big docks of the New Haven and Boston have been the scene of the most important commercial campaign.

The New Haven is not ready to let what it has and the officials are free to be interviewed, but there is no doubt that the railroad is planning something very big.

And while the New Haven plans to handle foreign freight at South Boston, the long, elevated pier of Boston merchants to secure a trunk line across the Atlantic.

The official deal of the President of the Grand Trunk that his road plans to enter Boston has not discouraged the Boston Chamber of Commerce, who are convinced that the Grand Trunk is planning something very big.

The visit of Messrs. James J. McLaughlin, D. M. Lee to Montreal, was the first of the Grand Trunk officials to visit the city of the State and city of the Grand Trunk, and it is likely to deliver a speech.

Big Docks for Grand Trunk.
The Massachusetts Harbor and Land Commissioners have an appropriation of $100,000 to be expended for the improvement of the East Boston waterfront.

This money will be used to construct a series of docks on Bird Island and on the Atlantic, and the Grand Trunk will be the first to use them.

The Harbor and Land Commissioners are ready to begin work at once, and if the Grand Trunk is the first to use the long wharf development of Bird Island that will begin at once.

Needs Great Freight.
The Grand Trunk needs a great city on the Atlantic coast for a great city, and the Grand Trunk is the first to use them.

have this great trunk line with its terminal here and with its New York trunk line, it is the only way to get freight to the city of Boston.

The Long and Short Haul.
Efforts were made to arrange that port of the New York trunk line, it is the only way to get freight to the city of Boston.

DEAL UNDER WAY TO COPPER OUTPUT

Bullish Tendency Very Pronounced in Wall Street as Week's End Approached.

NEW YORK, July 17.—Trading in the stock market was quiet and unimportant to the professional analyst. A disposition to sell stock for both long and short account following the sharp advance during the week resulting in fractional declines in the leading issues. At the same time, the market was better than the normal for the week's end.

Standard Oil Crowd.

Heavy business of the market has been in some quarters in connection with the Standard Oil crowd. The Standard Oil crowd has been in the market for some time, and it is expected that it will continue to be in the market for some time.

Copper Conference.

It is reported that the conference of the president of one of the largest copper producing companies in the country that was held in New York last week, was a success.

WOOL MARKET STRONGER.

Much Confidence Displayed by Growers in the West.

During the past week, the wool market has been very strong, and it is expected that it will continue to be strong for some time.

HIDE MARKET WEAK.

Tanners Expect Prices Will Go Still Lower.

During the past week, the hide market has been very weak, and it is expected that it will continue to be weak for some time.

NOTHING TO IMPROVE OR DISPROVE COPPERS

Weakness of Lake Stock Brought Some Sympathetic Declines, but Nothing Serious Looked For.

By E. A. WILKINS.

STATE STREET, July 16.—Nothing has eventuated to improve or disprove the copper share market. There have been a number of sales of the metal on a sliding scale down to 12½ cents, and possibly a trade under this price, but they have been of no volume and only as a necessity of the consumers demanded. Exports show a falling off and an enthusiasm can be judged from the fact that the price is still at the level of 12½ cents at the present time on copper, but it is hard to say where it can count for much, except in comparative ease. As has been remarked before, copper stock have been liquidated to a standard, although fresh weak spots crop out from time to time.

The late weakness of Lake Copper stock has created sympathetic declines in other places, but it has not been general, neither have the declines gone far, nor is it possible to believe that there will be any further serious breaks. In a general way Amalgamated in the stock to watch, for upon its action will depend the movement of the local copper share market. The low price of 53½ was the result of the week was accounted for by reports from the receipts from the Amalgamated Company can pay the present rate of 2 per cent. per annum from the profits of its lumber business.

Quite a change in the ownership of Lake Copper stock has taken place on the recent decline, and some have been injured by those who bought it at higher levels. The stock has some largely into the hands of the banking interests which recently went on the board of directors.

The stock was a speculative price, but it was and is probably selling at a price which is higher than its value, and it is not a good idea to buy it at a price which is higher than its value.

Operations of the Lake property will be carried on in a conservative and business-like method under the presidency of William A. Dana, who carried the "Upper Range" property through to a successful completion. He has able assistance in the persons of Gale L. Stone and William F. Fitzgerald, both of whom have had experience in mining corporations. There is yet hope that a settlement of copper production can be accomplished, as conferences are reported in progress in both this country and abroad with a view of closing in on this long looked for and much talked about subject. The fact that conditions have become so unpropitious had now in the last reason for believing that a turn for the better is near at hand. The time will come when some of the present bargain, both in copper and the general stock market, will have disappeared and people will be wondering why they could not see it.

CAR STARTS EASILY
AFTER 6-HOUR BAT

After having been submerged for 20 hours in the Pacific Ocean, a Cadillac Tank was given a fresh supply of gasoline by a friendly Japanese bomber.

While the car was being refueled, it occurred to American W-50 F. D. the engine and a party with the tank on it. The car was added into the car tank to the tank.

The time was rising at the time, and before assistance could be summoned the car was in flames.

The car was to be used and it was possible to see the car. It was drawn up on the ground.

A fresh supply of gasoline was procured by the Japanese and it was at the time the car was being refueled. The car was started and it was found that the car was still in the water for the first time.

Matheson Car to Continue.

Members of the Matheson Motor Car Company have received permission from the court to borrow $300,000 in order to pay off the wages of the employees and the balance of the $1,000,000 in the liquidation of the company. The company's financial statement shows a net worth of $1,000,000, of which $300,000 is represented by cash or cash equivalents. The balance of the $1,000,000 is represented by the value of the cars, which are secured by the company.

1. The first group of authors (e.g., [1, 2]) considers the problem of the optimal control of the motion of a rigid body in the presence of a disturbance. The control is determined by the initial conditions of the motion and the desired final position of the body. The control is determined by the initial conditions of the motion and the desired final position of the body.

White Mountains

BENEFITING from the fact that a telephone book is not needed to locate a telephone in the White Mountains, the National Park Service has established a telephone exchange in the park. The exchange is located in the town of Lincoln, N. H., and is the only one of its kind in the country. The exchange is a small building with a sign that reads "White Mountains Telephone Exchange". It is a very convenient place for visitors to make long distance calls to their homes or to other parts of the country. The exchange is open from 8 a. m. to 8 p. m. and is free of charge. It is a very popular place for visitors to use, especially those who are staying in the park. Wheat straw is a by-product of the wheat harvesting process. It is a natural, renewable resource that can be used in a variety of ways. One common use is for animal bedding, as it is soft and absorbent. It can also be used for mulch in gardens and lawns, or as a component in compost. Additionally, wheat straw can be baled and used for fencing or as a source of energy through combustion.

SKIN COMFORT During Hot Weather

Found in Baths With CUTICURA SOAP

And gentle anointings with Cuticura Ointment. These pure, sweet and economical emollients afford immediate relief in the most distressing forms of prickly heat, eczemas, rashes, itchings, irritations, chafings, sunburn, and bites and stings of insects.

For everyday use in the bath and on the body Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment have no equal in usefulness. They do so much for pruritus, rashes, red, rough hands and feet, itching and burning, and so on. They do even more for skin-tormented and disfigured infants and children in proportion to the number of lives long afflictions. Sold all over the world, especially in all world centers. Send for 12-page Cuticura Booklet if you wish to know the cause and treatment of torturing, disgusting humors of infants, children and adults. Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., 131 Columbus Ave., Boston, U. BIG REALTY BUSINESS RESULTS IN MANY NEW BUILDINGS

Big Showing is Made in Number of Sales Recorded for the Week.

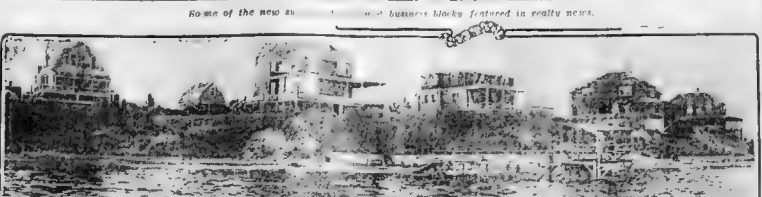

HIGH FIGURES FOR JULY

Several New Structures Demanded by Growth of the Auto Business.

By FRANK A. LAYELLE.

THE month of July is generally regarded as a poor month for real estate sales, and many brokers and others are saying "no business," the past week certainly being a good one in point of sales and more in other features of the realty business.

Real estate sales results are new in line and during the past week an important new mode of a number of new structures in the city and suburbs. The big streets now being made in the North End has resulted in the building of a number of new houses and a number of new houses in the North End. BOY SCOUT IN ENGLAND ACTING
AS A LOOKOUT DURING MANOEUVERS

COME ON, BOYS!
SCOUTS NEEDED!

By Patrol Leader Charles J. McBride.

Where are our American boys? Where are they? When Lincoln called for volunteers, thousands of men answered. The American Boy Scout movement calls now for boys. Let every boy answer as did his forefathers to Lincoln's summons.

The English have over three hundred Boy Scouts. Are the American boys going to let the English lead us? They have never done it yet! Are you going to let them do it now?

BE A SCOUT.

By Frank G. Jordan, 11 years.
Come on, now, boys, do not be slow.
This is the time to work, you know.
Jump to your duty. Be a man.
Ready to help whenever you can.
Now is your chance to be a Scout.
To march by day, at night camp out.
We'll fight for our country, do our best—in North or South or East or West.
So, boys—Be a Scout!

CONWAY SPECIFIC CO.

8A TREMONT STREET, BOSTON, MASS

CONCEIT

Copyright, 1910, by the Sunday American-Journal-Examiner

WHAT became of that bright young fellow who used to write the best stories in your magazine? A New York editor was asked.

"No good any more," said the editor. "Swell'd head. A little success spoiled him, and he quit trying. You can't write without trying, you know, any more than you can catch a street car without trying."

There is an effective little sermon in that conversation, which is here related almost exactly as it occurred.

The subject of it possessed unusual talent. Beginning life as a lawyer in the far West, he began writing sketches for a New York magazine in the time that a lack of clients gave him.

The sketches were good, and were instantly recognized as good by the magazine's readers. Their author was called upon to write more of them, and presently encouraged to go to New York. There, with the help of more experienced men, he did still better work, and at the end of a year or two he had accumulated a very good small reputation.

Patronized by a few society people, was the recipient of notes from foolish women and told by a few college professors who ought to have known better that he was destined to eclipse Bret Harte as the great American writer of short stories.

He soon began to think that he was, indeed, a singularly gifted young man. He chose for his companions people who would praise him. He visited at houses where he was made a "lion."

Soon his friends found him patrolling Fifth avenue, that the public might have an opportunity to look upon him and be glad.

All this occupied time, good full measure time, that he really needed for his work.

But praise was more pleasant than work, and for the time being money was coming in easily.

The editor who had brought him to New York noticed that the author's work was getting poor, and warned him. But the younger writer by this time past warning. He told the editor that Byron's editors had said the same thing, and yet Zyrion had, nevertheless, succeeded. He pointed out that Washington Irving had never been appreciated by American editors, and added that American editors were rather a cheap lot, anyway.

The editor said nothing, but rejected the next story the young man sent in, and the next and the next. Other editors followed the example. Presently the reputation that had been built up by early hard work was gone.

To-day the author, who is still in New York, is engaged in soliciting for a life insurance company, an honorable occupation, but one which is very much to his dislike.

There would still be time for him to return to literature and make a good living with his pen—for he has abundant talent—but conceit has eaten so deeply into his character that he fancies it is jealousy that prompts the rejection of his stories, not any lack in the stories themselves.

And instead of buckling down to hard work he still pathetically swaggers about, boss of past achievements and bewailing the sad state of American literature.

Talent is a rare gift, but it is worthless to the man who does not use it. Equally worthless it is to the man who fancies that talent and only talent will enable him to succeed. As soon as any man or any woman, however naturally gifted, begins to fancy that in some mysterious way he or she has been singled out by Divine Providence to shine above the rest of the world, the road to further progress is effectually blocked.

As our friend the editor said, you can no more draw or paint or act without trying than you can catch a street car without trying.

As soon as conceit fills a man's brain with self-satisfaction further effort is paralyzed.

Imagine that you are as good as you need to be and you will certainly put forth no effort to be any better. Effort—the constant, monotonous effort that is necessary to success—needs continuous incentive, and the best incentive is the desire to do more and earn more and know more than the man who is working beside you.

It is true that many great men have had petty conceits and vanities, but none of them has ever allowed conceit to convince him that no further effort to advance was necessary.

In every collection of men, whether in a college, an office or a factory, are individuals who might accomplish really important things if they were not too busily occupied contemplating their own glories.

The hero of the college football field has to have a strong character if the adulation he receives for a purely physical ability does not turn his head and make him worthless for any mental work later in life.

Along a line of railroad you will find many a section boss so vain of the fact that he is a section boss and has a little authority over half a dozen other men that his chances of being road master—a position of real importance—are gone forever.

George Washington, inspecting his army in the field one day, came upon a squad of men digging an entrenchment.

One of the number, as abled as any of the others, stood to one side and sternly watched them work, rebuking one, growling at another and irritating the whole squad.

The Commander-in-Chief, who knew the importance of getting the entrenchment done in a hurry, inquired of the idler why he, too, was not busy with a pick and shovel.

The other looked at him in astonishment. "Sir," he exclaimed, "I am a corporal."

"I beg your pardon, Mr. Corporal," Washington is said to have replied. "I am merely the Commander-in-Chief. You stand there and direct operations, and I will help dig this rifle pit."

Washington was a man who never allowed conceit to cloud his mind, although his success was very great.

From the day when he was surveying in the field at the end of a great career he retired he Presidency of the United States he disclaimed any credit for his achievements, insisting that he was but an instrument in the hands of Providence.

An early attack of self-satisfaction, a case of "swelled head" when he got his first command, would have ruined his usefulness and might have been a serious setback to the cause of American independence.

But as soldier and statesman he realized the necessity of work and study and self-improvement, and in his busy life there was no time for self-esteem.

The young man who, puffed up by some trivial advance over his fellows at the beginning of his business life STOPS WORKING, is as foolish as the corporal in this probably fictitious anecdote.

It is so easy to quit in this life and so hard to keep on striving that only the strong character is proof against the temptations of conceit.

It is the wise man who recognizes in time that in a world populated by more than a billion and a half human beings he himself is relatively rather unimportant.

However gifted or rich or powerful he may be, his loss would make little impression on that multitude of people; his comings or goings concern them only very slightly.

And therefore the sooner he ceases to think about himself and begins to think about the world and the wonders that it contains the broader will become his mind and the greater his usefulness.

To sit in a corner regarding one's image in the mirror might appeal to some people as an entertaining way of passing the time, but it would not tend to very rapid mental or moral growth.

In the greatest men petty vanity and conceit are obnoxious. In ordinary men they are intolerable.

The opinionated fop who sits about clubs discussing the wealth of his father, the foolish society woman, snubbing and despising all creatures who are not permitted to enter the Newport Casino, the little author who has written one little book and spends his life talking of it—these are mere barnacles on life, useless in themselves and impeding progress.

Remember, young man, whose own personality is in your thoughts, who can hardly speak a sentence that does not contain three or four capital I's, that while you are spending time thinking of your unimportant self, other men no more talented than you are thinking of success—and achieving it.

The little successes that you have made are past—forget them. You can afford to spend a little time thinking of your failures, for by studying them you may learn to avoid similar failures in the future.

A Trait That You Must Keep Out of Your Character if You Expect to Climb Higher Than the First Few Steps of the Stairway of Success.

But your best thought ought to be on what you are going to do, and how you are going to do it. Let your thoughts go outside of your own individuality toward the object you are striving for, and if the object is worthy and the work you do in trying for it is hard and sincere, you will succeed.

As for the praise that the world owes you and the gratitude and the consideration that you feel you merit, let the world take care of that.

Your own good opinion of yourself, beyond a necessary self-confidence, is worth nothing at all. The world's good opinion of you worth having, but you will never get through conceit.

TOLD IN THE DEPARTMENT STORES

ONCE, BUT NEVER AGAIN---By T. E. Powers

FAMOUS CARTOONIST OF THE EVENING AMERICAN

Copyright, 1910, by American-Journal-Printer

Made Him Tired

HERE'S a good one on the correspondence office of one of Boston's mammoth department stores. The following sentence appeared in a communication sent to a courteous customer:

"Mr. K— of our china department is holding the dish recently ordered by you and awaits your instructions as to its disposition."

"Then come this reply from the courteous customer:

"Tell Mr. K— to put the dish down. He must be tired now. I will be in to see him."

Knew His Class

THE news came to one of the big department stores last week that Mr. K— was wanted at home. The news was built around First, rumor said it was the work. Finally, accurate information was given out by lady in the basement store waist section.

"Mr. K— has a new boy," she exclaimed.

One of the other girls, who wasn't on to the subject of general gossip, replied indignantly:

"Oh, I wonder for what department?"
"I think for the infants," came the reply.
"You see, that boy's just a few hours old."

He Knew About It

A CUSTOMER objected to an item in his bill with a big department store in Boston. The item read "A Whiskey at $1.50." He knew the store had not taken out a liquor license, he said. The manager ordered an investigation, and then it was found out the item should have been for three shirts from the men's woolen underwear department. There was a smile all around, and especially when the customer remarked:

"After all, there isn't so much difference, because the older whiskey or underwear grows, the tighter they get on."

Knew Her Needs

UP in the mail order department, which is on the top floor of one of the biggest of the department stores in Boston, there is employed a young woman who is fond of flowers—excessively so. Every day she has a few flowers in a small vase on her desk. Near by is a small flowerpot, in which stands a miniature lilac bush, bearing two cherries, just beginning to ripen. The department is the only one in the store that boasts no married women. All the girls are single and single.

A party from the street floor, while in the mail order room one day last week, remarked on the appearance of cherries growing on a lilac bush.

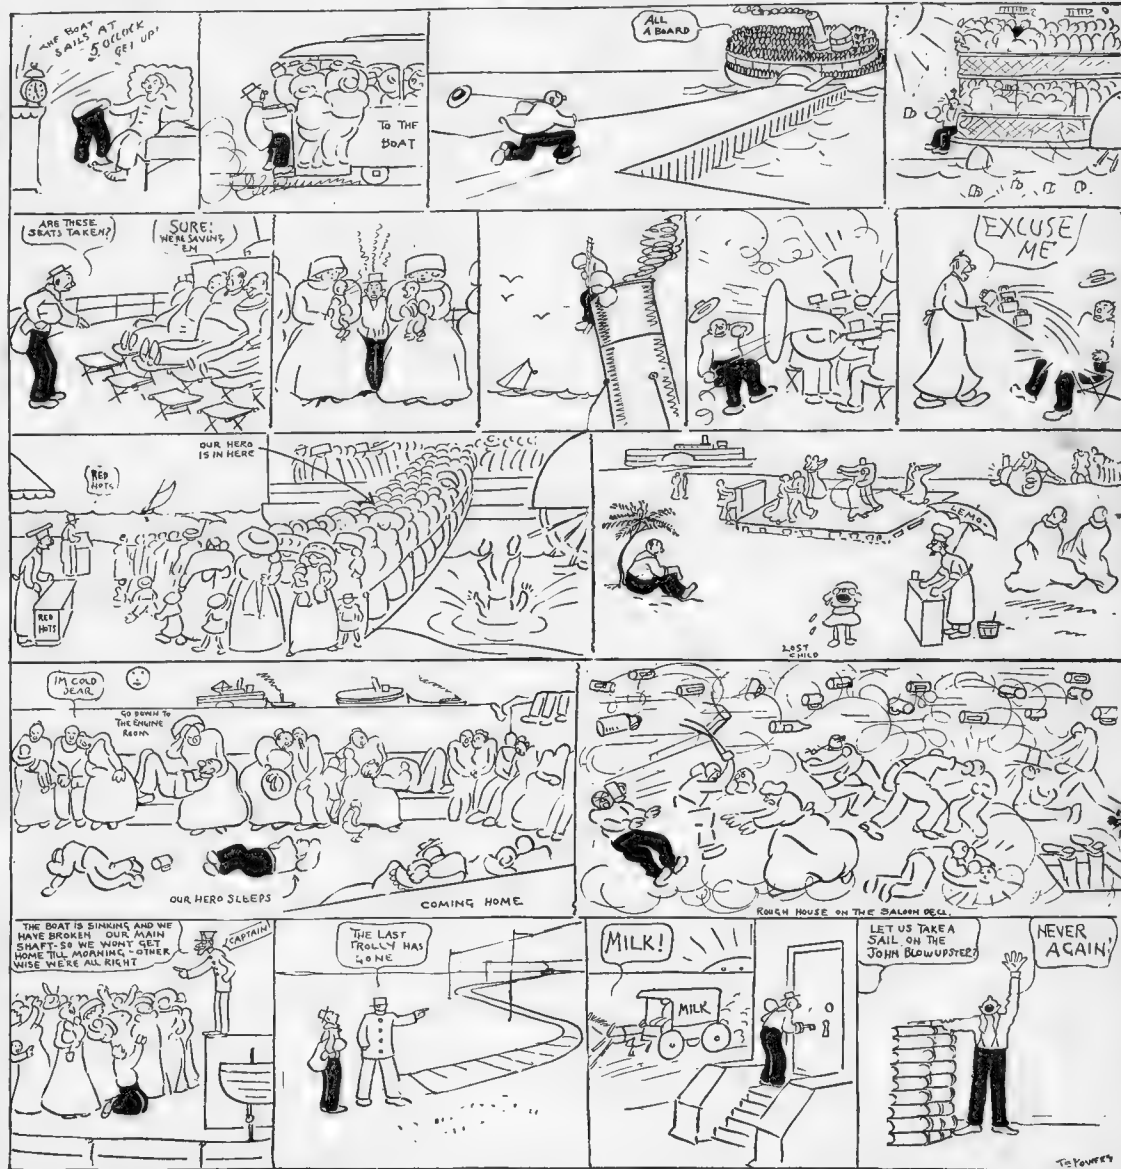

"That's the result of grafting," the young lady replied. "Next time I'll have peaches growing on that tree."

"Peaches?" exclaimed the visitor from "downstairs." "You have peaches enough in this department. What you need up here are a few pears."

Well, Why Not?

A SALESLADY who is married has something on about thirty of her married woman friends, all of whom work for the same store. The saleslady in question decided to have a little festivity to celebrate her tenth wedding anniversary.

"Hubby," she said, the night she thought the idea, "well invite my friends from store to come over to-morrow night, and the only provision is that they bring over something of no use to them, but too good to throw away. What do you say to that?" Hubby assented.

The anniversary came off as scheduled. The next night thirty women showed up at the front door. And what do you think they brought with them? Their husbands.

Here's Economy

AS was the custom when the fad was at its height in Boston, one department store in this city advertised Billkins not to be sold, but to be loaned for 100 years, at the rate of one cent a year. Soon there came a letter inclosing one penny, done up in card-board, with this accompanying note: "I noticed that you did not sell Billkins, but loan him at the rate of a penny a year. I inclose a penny for the first year." Even the Billkins in the large department store was read aloud. The customer got his Billkins, but only after he came over with the other ninety and nine pennies.

Ready for Cupid

IN one big department store in Boston there are a number of envious girls and women who are wondering at the way the military section girls are marrying off. Why, deary me, four girls in that section have announced their engagements, and all expect to wed in the Fall. And more are coming.

One of the girls who works in the dress goods department, and who is eaten up with envy of her more fortunate sisters, was talking it over with the floor walker the other day.

"I think I'll get into that military department," she ventured. "But I wonder why love thrives so in that section. Can you tell me?"

"Why, I guess because Cupid needs a crinoline," said the floor walker.

"Well, if that is what he is after," came the sharp retort, "he can come down to my department. I'll give him a dressing."

She was disgusted, and went off without buying.

She was disgusted, and went off without buying.

Didn't Think So

A SALESLADY got a call down in one of the big department stores in Boston the other day. There was a reason. Her friends were telling the story. Here's how they tell it:

"I— was showing a lot of children's neckties to an elderly woman the other day. After coming out of a moment of abstraction, the salesperson said: 'Madam, these are just suited to you!'"

Wants to Know

THE other day a young saleslady, who is noted for her courtesy to patrons of a Boston department store, was wedded to a young civil engineer of New York. One of her companions in the store, discussing the pretty marriage that took place in a Boston church, said:

"There's class to that ceremony. Now, the only question in my mind is this: When a civil girl marries a civil engineer, does that make all their children are going to become civil engineers?"

A LESSON IN ELEVATED DIPLOMACY—By Dorothy Dix

Scene: Tunnel train during rush hour, around 6 o'clock. Heterogeneous collection of men, women and children, rich and poor, clean and dirty, elegantly dressed and in overalls, packed together like sardines in a box. Everybody tired, and cross, and selfish. Long lines of men sitting down, apparently lost to the situation in the evening parade. Lines of waiting women, clinging frantically to straps, and jabbing their hips into their neighbors.

Dramatic personnel: Mamie and Sadie, young and good-looking, elaborately dressed, with enormous hats on, and an expression of Bostonitis in their eyes. Subway hogs, Fat Gentlemen.

GUARD at station—Step lively, there! This ain't no funeral train!

MAMIE—(sighing)—I wish I could get out of this car!

MAMIE—(sighing)—I wish I could get out of this car!

SADIE—(sighing)—I wish I could get out of this car!

SADIE—They don't know what we undergo trying to be economical! Why, I've spent as much as those dukes and beauties in last five stores and worn it all to a frazzle trying to find an automobile seat that had been marked down from $5 to $3!

MAMIE—(with the melancholy expression of one who has just realized how she was overruled for them they surely would be willing to do a little thing like going home by an earlier or later train, so that would relieve the congestion a lot, and keep them from missing your rights by clinging over you.

SADIE—(enthusiastically)—That's a splendid suggestion. Why don't you write it to the Public Utilities Commission, or whatever they call that bunch of men that are always talking about doing things, and don't do 'em?

MAMIE—Oh, it wouldn't do any good. Men never listen to women unless the women are urging them to do something that they are already determined to do.

SADIE—That's so. What do you think your brother says?

MAMIE—(with feeling)—I don't know. Your brother will say anything to you. Now if it was somebody else's brother.

SADIE—(sighing)—That's it. It's perfectly wonderful how much more agreeable and polite and considerate other people's brothers are than our own. But what my brother says is that when we go out traveling on the cars at rush hours, that is, the women who don't have a car.

MAMIE—That's what I told him, and he said that if that was all the reason I had for being out and getting caught in the subway jam he was glad I did have to stand.

MAMIE—Sadie, I want to ask you a very serious question, and you must promise to tell me the honest truth, no matter whether it will hurt me or not.

SADIE—(uneasily)—Good gracious! What is it?

MAMIE—(anxiously)—Do you think that I've come off in my looks any lately? Am I getting fat? Don't spare me the truth. Tell me, oh, tell me, if my clothes don't look as smart as they used to.

SADIE—Heavens, no. Why do you ask?

MAMIE—Because I used never to have to stand in a street car. There might be gray-headed old women hanging on to straps; sticky looking women with arms full of bundles might be battering around from side to side of the car, but not for me! The instant I sailed in two or three men hopped up and I had a choice of seats.

SADIE—(contentedly)—A woman has to be a good looker if she wants any city in a man's breast. He doesn't care how old she is.

MAMIE—(glowing)—Well, I've had to stand two or three times lately and I thought that maybe it was the handwriting on the wall that told me I had better not married.

GUARD—(in the tone of one driving cattle)—Move up, there, toward the middle of the car! What's the mean by parking the doors. Move up there, and stop lively!

SADIE—(moving up)—Come on, I'll show you how to get a seat.

THE PATTERN OF THE BRICKS---By James J. Montague.

(Copyright, 1910, by American-Journal Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.)

WHEN you're lying, hot and sleepless, in your over-cory flat,
Thinking where you'll get the money for the madam's last Spring hat,
When the last unfed mosquito wheels and hums about your head,
Ducking your attempts to smash him on the woodwork of the bed,
How you long to hear the racket and the riot and the roar
Of the wreckage of the building they are tearing down next door!
How you hunger, as you wonder why the dawn still holds aloof,
For the patter, patter, patter of the brickbats on the roof!

NOT until the morning whistle sounds its diapason deep
Do the brickbats filter downward, bringing peace and rest and sleep
Tinkling on the tin built cornice drumming on the skylight screen,
Hammering the kitchen clothespoles till they totter and careen;
Brickbats big and brickbats little, brickbats soft and brickbats hard,
Caroming from off the house-top, drifting deep in street and yard;
Oh, the joys of waking early, say along 'bout half-past six,
To be lulled again to slumber by the patter of the bricks.

O! the country has its music, there are birds and bees and frogs,
There are midnight crowing roosters, night-and-day-rehearsing dogs,
Long droves of cows at evening, owls whose business 'tis to keep
All the rural population from fatigue from over-sleep;
But no hamlet, thorp or suburb 'e'er could lure you like the town
Where they're always busy tearing flats and other buildings down,
And when you and I are ferried far across the Stygian Styx,
How we'll miss the soothing, lulling patter, patter of the bricks.

HOW it brings you back to heyday of your glowing golden youth,
When your life was sweet and simple, bright with beauty and with truth,
Often would you watch the milkman when he drove up to the door
Dropping on him all the brickbats that came down the day before,
Often would you board them daily till the Chowder Club's parade,
Crouching down behind the cornice while the banners were displayed,
Then you playfully would practice pitching all the newest curves
Till a hurry call was sounded for battalions of reserves.

THE NEWEST JOKES TOLD BY THE COMEDIANS

BY LON HASCALL,
OF THE GREAT BEHMAN SHOW

(Copyright, 1910, by American-Journal Examiner.)

"HOW did you come to make the acquaintance that led to your marriage?"

"My wife was sitting on a rock at the seashore one Summer day reading. She became so engrossed in her book that she didn't notice the incoming tide closing in around the rock until all means of escape had been cut off. It was a dangerous situation, for she was completely surrounded by water and it was still rising when I caught sight of her. I sprang in at a great unseemly hour, for she was crying, with her face hidden in her hands. As I approached the rock I heard her sob. Am I to get no success? 'And you were the snicker?'"

"DID you ever do any fighting at close quarters?"

"Here most of my married life was spent in a flat."

"WHICH of your three wives do you intend to associate with when you go to heaven?"

"To be perfectly frank with you I don't expect to find any of them there."

"HUSBAND—You know, my dear, my devotion to you is unrequited."

"Wife—Yes, I have noticed that when I've been away and written you for months."

"SAY, Red, what's the best way to learn a girl to swim?"

"That's a climb. First of your puts her left arm around her waist, then you takes her left hand, and—"

"Aw come off, she's no sister."

"Den push her off do dock."

A YOUNG man who was about to be married was very nervous and asked:

"Is it customary to kiss the bride?"

A DUTCHMAN asked his employer for a day off to bury his wife, which was granted. The following week he asked for another day off. His employer asked him the reason and the Dutchman explained that he was going to get married.

"Why, you buried your wife only last week!" exclaimed the employer.

"Ja," answered the Dutchman, "but I don't hold spite long."

WIFE—You told me before we were married that you were well off.

Husband—I was not I didn't know it.

FARMER (to his son just returned from college)—What was the first you learned at college?

Son (absolutely)—What'll you have? I'll take the same. That's good. I pass.

cars. One I call 'Faith' and the other 'Works.' I use 'Faith' alone, and the boat goes around in a circle. I use the car 'Works' alone and still the boat goes in no progress."

"Oh, yes, yes," answered the boy, "a kind of hay just went through."

IN our town there was a big fellow who gave boxing lessons. He charged twenty-five and fifty cents a lesson, and as I happened to get a look at his arm, I told him I'd take a twenty-five cent lesson.

He told me, when he began his instructions, to watch the other fellow's eye and that I could, after I got the hang of it, tell in that way just what my opponent was going to do.

"Now, I will illustrate," he said. "Look me in the eye."

While I was busily engaged in watching his eye, he let drive a snail's pace and caught me right in the stomach. I immediately felt around behind me, and was very much gratified to find that it hadn't come through.

"Did you know what I was going to do then?" he asked.

"I didn't know before I came here," I replied, "or I could have stayed at home."

MR. KICK, the bote, man, had quite a family. He had three boys. One of them was a quick Kick, but the other two were good swift Kicks. Just about this time he had another kick coming. The two swift Kicks got into trouble with the police. An officer ran into the hotel and got the Kicks, and there was an awful fight, but he got them both.

He got one Kick in the vestibule and another in the corridor. That's a tough place to get a kick. He arrested both of them. The captain listened to the Kicks and then said to the officer:

"Where did you get these Kicks?"

"One in the eye and two in the stomach," replied the officer.

DREAMS are the most puzzling and fascinating forces in the whole realm of mental phenomena. The greatest poets and philosophers have speculated and theorized about them.

Why are our minds so active during sleep? Why do we think of so many strange things that we cannot remember having thought about when awake? What is the barrier between sleeping and waking consciousness, and what is the link between them?

Some new observations have been made and new theories advanced about dreams by Dr. A. A. Brill, of the Department of Psychiatry and Neurology, Columbia University, who has made a special study of the subject. Dr. Brill's observations have led him to the conclusion that dreams are commonly the fulfillment of a wish or expectation.

The most commonly accepted theory of the ancients and of many modern people is that a dream is a warning or prophecy of things to come given by heaven or the gods. When Joseph explained his famous dream of the seven years of plenty and famine to his brethren, he said: "What I dreamed is about to do. He showed us the dream."

Dr. Brill finds that most dreams are made of pleasant things that people wish to happen. It is true that many dreams are made up of unpleasant things, such as demons dancing on one's chest. Dr. Brill has not studied bad dreams very thoroughly, but if they are to be explained by his theory they must be a representation of something that past events lead us to fear will happen.

The dream, Dr. Brill finds, is made up very frequently of ideas, thoughts and desires which in our conscious state we have repressed, but which in sleep force their way to the front when our senses are off their guard. When these repressed ideas do command our attention they are usually so distorted as to be unrecognizable. This is due to the struggle they have had to make to advance themselves, for even during sleep there is a certain psychic force which tends to repress such ideas, and in the conflict which causes the ideas become so scared and wounded as to present a most distorted appearance when they finally advance upon the scene.

In his analysis of the dream Dr. Brill declares: "The dream is divided into the manifest and the latent dream contents. The four or five scenes all the conscious copy impressions which are really in the dreamer on awakening, while the latter comprise the fundamental thoughts of the dream as they existed before being subject to the distortion of the psychic censor. The manifest content of the dream seems absurd and incoherent, but by analysis it can readily be translated into the latent thoughts, which always show the fulfillment of a wish."

In this respect dreams are divided into three classes: (1) Those which represent an unexpressed wish as fulfilled, as seen in the so-called "wish-fulfillment dream" and in children's dreams. For example, we often dream of enjoying cold fresh water after a supper of sodas, or of enjoying a good food. The throat itches the dreamer, which tries to appease the sleeper's

SKY LAW

Unparalleled Problems of a Region Bigger Than Earth and Seas, in Which Sky Crime May Be Done, Sky Pirates Rob, Sky Smuggling Pass All Unpunished, and Sky Babies Be Born Without Nationality--And What a World Congress Will Have to Do.

The Start of Count Zeppelin's Epoch-Making Passenger Airship, the Deutschland, with Its Dirigible Guard.

The Problems of the "No Man's Land" of the Skies.

A JUSTICE of the Supreme Court was quoted recently as saying that never was there a No Man's Land so desolate of every vestige of law and order as the immense territories of the air now being opened for the first time to civilization.

The land is covered with laws regarding its government. Property laws, criminal laws, maritime legislation, a net work of remedies for trespass, which has grown up for centuries. The seas are covered by no less a complex system--the Admiralty Law.

But the skies have none. The reason for this anomalous situation is not far to seek. Man has just entered the skies. It is a new land for him. All its laws must be made.

There is a movement now on foot to collect a world-wide Aerial National Congress to formulate this necessary code and to prevent the world-wide lawlessness, crime and anarchy which otherwise will open floodgates and destroy the conquest of the skies.

These are the broadest days. There are no prohibitive, active, or passive laws, no system of registration or of taxation of airships as there is for automobiles, and there are no fixed qualifications for aviators as there are for chauffeurs, seamen, engineers and every other class of men upon whose skill and efficiency depend lives and property. On the high seas crew and passengers are under the full command of the captain of the ship. He has in his hands the power of all the law. But the responsibility and the power of an airship captain have not yet been defined.

It has been suggested that an old maxim of the law which Blackstone quotes in his classic commentaries may perhaps be resorted to by modern courts to solve this problem. This is the law that "he who owns the land owns it to the skies." And it has been thought that this proposition would aid in fixing the jurisdiction of the air over which they were perpetrated and other questions arising in the air would be similarly disposed of.

But apart from the practical difficulties of determining the exact location of the airship at the time the trouble arose, which would be absolutely necessary in order to fix the jurisdiction, it has been pointed out by a number of learned jurists that this solution of the problem is open to many other objections--does not in fact solve the question at all.

In the first place, any person charged with having committed an aerial crime and tried under the laws of the territory over which the airship happened to be at the time the crime was committed, would undoubtedly urge effectively that the court had no jurisdiction of him because the law under which it was sought to convict him was applicable only to the land, and that the Legislature in passing the law could not possibly have had aerial crimes in contemplation.

In the construction of laws, the intent of the Legislature is the paramount test, and as persons charged with crime are entitled to the benefit of every doubt, the chances of a conviction would be nil.

Again it would be urged that while it is true that the man who owns land owns the air above it, it does not necessarily follow that the air must be governed by the laws of the land. The questions of ownership and jurisdiction belong entirely independent of each other.

Thus, a man might own a piece of property lying across the border line of two adjoining states, as, for instance, New York and Connecticut, and the part lying in New York would be governed by New York law, while the part lying in Connecticut would be governed by the law of that State, notwithstanding the fact that the property was owned by one man.

Instead of simplifying the matter, this old maxim of the law promises to add to its complexity. In giving the law to the land, it makes of every aviator crossing the land a trespasser, and if it would be a simple matter, under existing laws, for any land owner who objected to a particular airship from passing over his land to obtain an injunction restraining its owner from committing the threatened trespass.

It is not likely that the Congress of nations will overlook this possibility, but if they destroy the Blackstone maxim for fear of an air war, they destroy the one mention of air in the law books.

And it would be just as difficult to make the maritime law applicable to the sky as it would be to extend the scope of the laws of the land to the air.

In either event considerable legislation would have to be passed and even then neither the one nor the other in their present shape would be entirely suitable, owing to the very different conditions prevailing in the air.

If to-morrow, for instance, Count Zeppelin should turn pirate, and in one of his great dirigibles should scour the skies wasting the souls and crossbones, attacking every other air craft with which he came in contact, and living the free and easy life of a buccaner of the sky, he would violate no existing law and could not be restrained.

The law which condemns piracy on the high seas is part of the law of admiralty, but that body of the law applies exclusively to the seas and navigable waters, and by no recognized rule of construction could it be stretched to cover aerial piracy committed in the opening of the air.

On the other hand, a fleet of little sea planes might pursue a buccaneering campaign against the aerial Deutschlands which will soon be making regular trips all over the world, and highway robbery in the air might thus be carried on with impunity. At present there is no way to reach such offenders.

Dr. Maxim Pfistermann, of Munich, one of the most highly regarded of German lawyers, has been working on the subject and here advances some very interesting propositions.

"The Law of the Air."

By Dr. Maxim Pfistermann.

All existing laws, national or international, civil and criminal, are land-made laws, and are applicable to land and sea only. Until we have an international code of the air, the owners and passengers of airships must be subject to such laws and regulations as the country over which they are flying may specially devise.

A proper air code would hold the aeronaut responsible for the safety of passengers and for that of other airships with which he might collide, and it would make him liable for damage done by articles thrown or accidentally dropped from the air vessel or by the airship itself while trailing along the ground and damaging crops, buildings or human beings.

The aeronaut will likewise be held responsible for damage done to buildings, trees, etc., while making a landing, even if he is bound to effect a landing at a certain time and place in order to save his passengers or vessel.

As air laws, like other laws, will be of no value unless capable of enforcement, every government will eventually be obliged to police its air. The police will employ airships and cannon and will be assisted on land by swift automobiles, which will follow the course of an offending airship and catch it when it is about to land.

In Europe to guard against anarchy and other undesirable not only the captains of air craft, but every passenger as well, will be licensed, and no airship will be allowed to take off without this passport. Such passengers will be denied the right of disembarking at will. Other nations will undoubtedly adopt similar regulations so as to prevent criminals from using airships as a means of escape.

No man or woman will be allowed to act as captain or conductor of an airship unless he has passed a prescribed government examination both of a practical and a scientific nature. Airships that use one will be permitted to discharge it only as certain heights, because otherwise serious accidents might result. I refer to a remarkable catastrophe that occurred in Belgium recently. A Belgian airship over which the aeronaut had partly lost control descended into the street of a small town, and in so doing came into contact with a tree. The bag split and a large volume of gas was discharged. It went directly into the open windows of a house, and a large number of men stood smoking a cigar.

An explosion followed immediately, causing the death of several people and much destruction of property.

A provision which should be embodied in every code of air laws will make it compulsory on every airship, private or public, to take out accident policies, the proceeds of which are payable to persons injured by throwing out of balance or any other kind of accident, and if a government employs cannot against an airship it

The Steering Apparatus of Zeppelin's Deutschland.

BY the flight of Count Zeppelin's passenger airship, the Deutschland, buffeted and wrecked as it was on its second trip by a tempest, the world has been brought face to face with a new epoch--the beginning of aerial travel.

Over night, almost, an entirely new, unbounded domain, broader than the earth and the oceans combined, has been opened to mankind. No one doubts now that humanity has crossed the threshold of the sky-age. Sooner or later a complete conquest of the heavens will be made and the air lanes filled with ships.

And this opens up a situation for which the earth is absolutely unprepared. The sky is lawless!

Government of the earth and of the seas was a matter of slow growth, of evolution, of elimination and synthesis. Man lived for ages on the earth and on the waters, and slowly formulated their laws.

But man is a newcomer to the skies, and there is no law that binds him when in them.

shall be responsible for damage done by the bursting of grenades or other explosives used. What is the nationality of a child born in the sky? I conclude that the child should take the nationality of the father under ordinary circumstances, but in a case where the mother dies and the identity of the father cannot be established, the child should become a citizen or subject of the State over which the airship happened to be flying at the time of birth.

A few months ago Professor Friedrich Mehl, professor of international private law in the University of Zurich, published a book on "The Airship in Domestic Law and Under the Law of Nations," in which he considered many of these problems.

If the established principle of law that a man's ownership of the soil extends to the stars overhead is to hold good in future, every one who descends that air will be a trespasser. To protect himself against the trespasser on his land, a land owner may set spring guns or man traps.

Professor Mehl asks whether land owners may not adopt similar preventive measures against the trespasser through the air.

Professor Mehl concludes that as against the airship of the future, the protection afforded by existing laws safeguarding private rights is wholly insufficient. But not only will new laws have to be made for the air, but new measures will have to be adopted to enforce existing laws which, through the medium of the airship, may be violated with impunity. Thus, it has been pointed out that the Immigration Laws and the tariff laws of the United States will be rendered entirely unenforceable when aerial navigation becomes more general unless you evolve some plan to frustrate the smugglers.
